Camera Geekery: Fuji GW690III review. I've always heard whispers of the Fuji GW690III among medium format shooters for its supposed legendary lens and portability, but had not ever used one in practice. So when the opportunity arose to borrow one and shoot for a weekend, I promptly got a photo chubby and was aroused to see what the fuss was ...

Camera Geekery: Fuji GW690III review - Japan Camera Hunter

Released in December 1985, the Fuji GW670II Professional was Fuji's follow-up to the Fujica GM 670 Professional as 6x7 camera. It differs from the GW690II only in having a smaller film gate and different gearing and numbering for the film advance mechanism. It was priced at ¥163,500. Fuji GW690iii Viewfinder. What I like the most with this camera is the huge negative it produces. 6 cm x 9 cm is the biggest size negative one can make on a medium format camera. If you want a larger format than that you need to scale up to large format cameras (4x5" for example).

Fuji GW690iii review - Trond Sandmo

The Fuji GW690III is a medium format film camera with a fixed 90mm F/3.5 lens, and requires no batteries at all!! The Camera takes 120 film, which is still widely available today, and developing is the same as 35mm film, so your local camera shop should be able to handle all your 120 needs.

Fuji GW690III 90mm F/3.5 Camera Review - Photo Jottings

The Fuji GW690III is a 90's-era 6X9 medium format rangefinder with a fixed 90mm f/3.5 lens. The angle of view is slightly wider than 'normal'. The camera is fully mechanical. It gets 8 exposures from a 120 roll or 16 on 220 if you are lucky enough to have some.

Fuji GW690III Review | Film Shooters Collective

The Fuji GW690III is easy in use, is relatively light and can be used handheld, has a very good lens and delivers massive negatives. The camera is sturdy, fully manual, without batteries (you need a handheld light-meter) feels good balanced in the hands, has a good viewfinder with parallax correction and is much easier to handle than my 1937 Contax II.

5 Frames with the Fuji GW690 III - By Phil Steelandt - 35mmc

nigelk · 2014-08-20 06:21. I have the GW690 and the GW690II cameras. I agree with avoiding the GW690III version due to the plastic body.

REVIEW: Fuji GW690II - The Texas Leica · Lomography

From the fully automatic point and shoot Fujifilm GA645Zi to the totally manual Fujifilm GW690III, Fujifilm's medium format cameras encompass a wide range of types and functions and formats. I purchased both of these cameras based on recommendations from very different sources and as different as they are, I enjoy them both.

A look at two uniquely different medium format Fujifilm ...

My go to camera is the Fuji GW690iii, I absolutely love it. The fact that it is so basic by today's standards, yet the results it produces are stunning, every single time. I love the limits that this camera impose on me. The fixed 90mm lens makes me think about my compositions, as there is no alternative, whilst the lack of a meter or any other electronic parts make me stop and think each ...

5 Frames with a Fuji GW690iii - by Tom Rayfield - 35mmc

Fuji GSW690iii With it's fixed 65mm f5.6 Fujinon EBC lens, full manual control and no meter, the Fuji GSW690iii is about as basic as a 'serious' camera can be.

Fuji GW 690 III Leaf-Shutter Lifespan | Photo.net ...

The GW690, and its successors the GW690II and III, are fixed-lens, leaf-shutter, medium-format (120/220) film cameras. They're manual focus rangefinders that take no batteries, offer no metering, and sport, by all accounts, exceptional lenses.
